1.1. Introduction

Knowledge that doctors have a responsibility to the society in which they residence has been expanded in recent years to include responsibilities to global health. This term is defined as a problem, issue, or concern certain health effects that cross national borders that may be caused by circumstances or things that happen in other countries, and the best way to deal with them is by cooperating in action. Global health is part of broader globalization movement involving the exchange of information, trade, politics, tourism, and many other human activities.

The development of views on global health has led to an increase in awareness of differences in health status around the world. Regardless of the campaign the great work that has been done to combat premature mortality and high morbidity debilitating in a poor country that has delivered such good results as success in eliminating smallpox and (hopefully) polio, the health status gap between countries and high-income countries with low-income countries are getting wider. It can be seen in cases of HIV/AIDS which show the worst effects in poor countries, but also because of the failure of poor countries to benefit from the perceived increase in wealth world that
