Dear Dio Caisar Darma:

We have reached a decision regarding your submission to the Journal of Eastern European and Central Asian Research (JEECAR), "Labor force and economic growth based on demographic pressures, happiness, and human development: Empirical from Romania".

Our decision is to: Revise and Resubmit. See comments below.

When resubmitting, please indicate how each of the listed items was addressed, or not, and for which reason.

Best regards,

Dr. Nikolay Megits

JEECAR Founding Editor-in-Chief

Comments from Peer-Review;

1. The main assumption of the reviewed article is that in addition to the traditional hard factors, the social factors (demographic pressures (DP), happiness index (HI), human development index (HDI), and labor force (LF)) also have a significant impact on the economic development of a given country. This statement has long been known and articulated by researchers at both macro- and micro-level topics.
2. The author uses several abbreviations (DP, HI, and HDI on LF and EG in Romania) in the abstract of the article. It would be useful to use these abbreviations here in full words (demographic pressures (DP), happiness index (HI), human development index (HDI), and labor force (LF).) Author will do this only later.
3. When the authors analyze the impact of demographic factors, it is useful to refer to both fertility and migration reasons for Romania and other Eastern European countries.
4. The author makes several statements in the introduction to the article, but these statements lack direct literature support. So, for example:

*„Since the 20th century, there has been new empirical evidence with a broad presentation of social science through the literature to provide new theoretical insights into the relationship between productivity, socioeconomic development, and gender equality”.

*„Some of the relevant literature has discussed the relationship between education on social realities such as democracy, economic development, human development, and happiness, and interaction”.

5. „DP, HI, and HDI indicators are closely related to LF and economic growth. This can be proved by various interrelated reasons”.
6. It is not entirely clear what the role of what is described in connection with Figure 1 is in the article.
7. It would be worth talking about the happiness index (HI) about The World Happiness Report, which is also an annual publication of the United Nations Sustainable Development Solutions Network.
8. I agree that the Human Development Index (HDI) is an important indicator, but it would also have been worth mentioning that the indicator also has a number of weaknesses.
9. With regard to the labor force (LF), it is also worth mentioning in the article that before the outbreak of the pandemic, there was a significant labor shortage in Romania and many countries in Eastern Europe. In this regard, Harari states that technology (robots and AI) contribute to the “the rise of the useless class” situation. This new revolution is not an ordinary industrial revolution. This will have a significant impact on the LF also examined by the author.
10. The formulation and explanation of the 10 hypotheses indicated in the article is very simplified. The indicated hypotheses require further elaboration.
11. The Path analysis used in this paper is used by the authors to assume that there is a correlation between the observable variables (DP, HI, HDI, and LF) because there are common variables behind the dependent variables (ED) that may have a random error, but they are all a function.
12. In the article discussing the topic, the authors list 67 sources. The literature sources are well described.
13. Overall, the article is well-founded by statistical methods. However, the conclusions described in it should be further elaborated.
