Dear chief editors: Payam Hanafizadeh, PhD

Thank you for this very valuable information. Of course we really appreciate the review process for this paper. To respond to the latest revision, we have consulted a proofreading service. Finally, manuscript corrections regarding language quality improvement have been implemented. You can find the latest files in this email. All forms of corrective words are listed with a 'red mark'. We also ship it on OJS.

Greetings,

Mr. Purwadi Purwadi

Please upload a plain file that the Word Track Change is inactive. Moreover, I looked over your abstract and I found the following sentence gramatically problematic.

phanafizadeh
2022-08-20 07:16

Please check it over:

"To support the presentation of the paper, our apply the Systematic Literature Review (SLR) technique, where there are three important things (demonstration of RDO, the practice of this concept to reduce panic buying, and stopping the retail system that is too long)."

Please get the manuscript polished and upload the proofreaded file.

Kind regards,

Payam

We have now copyedited your submission. A marked-up version is attached. This will clearly not be the final version of your paper as there appear to be several important issues to resolve.

It is not clear to me that this is the complete version of your paper. Can you check this, please? For example, you introduce the concept of Systematic Literature Review (at tedious length, when a simple sentence and reference would suffice) and propose some Research Questions. However, it is not clear that your review of the literature is systematic - there are no linking passages or subheadings to indicate the "system" you used for choosing the particular papers you refer to. And you do not return to the Research Questions to summarize the learnings from the literature. Is something missing?

In the Introduction, you do not define "RDO", leaving the reader in doubt as to what the paper is about. As far as I can tell, the only author using the specific phrase "RDO" is you, in one other publication. I have therefore inserted a definition taken from Kho (2021) for your consideration.

The Abstract was incoherent. I have suggested an alternative that summarizes the paper's contents. This is for your consideration. Whatever

In your revised manuscript there are no changes made relevant to two issues raised in my message to you. Can you let me know, please, what you have done about these issues?

Issue 1.

It is not clear to me that this is the complete version of your paper. Can you check this, please? For example, you introduce the concept of Systematic Literature Review (at tedious length, when a simple sentence and reference would suffice) and propose some Research Questions. However, it is not clear that your review of the literature is systematic - there are no linking passages or subheadings to indicate the "system" you used for choosing the particular papers you refer to. And you do not return to the Research Questions to summarize the learnings from the literature. Is something missing?

Issue 2.

The Literature Review seems quite repetitive. I have not tried to do anything about that.

I look forward to your responses on these matters.
