Based on the micro-data of industrial enterprises in Anhui Province from 1998 to 2011, this paper analyzes the causal relationship between government subsidies and enterprises' export behavior on the basis of propensity score matching method and difference-in-differences model to overcome the endogeneity problem. The results show that there is not only a significant positive correlation between government subsidies and export behavior of enterprises, but also a significant unidirectional causality relationship. That is, government subsidies not only promote potential exporters to make export decisions, but also cause existing exporters to increase export intensity. Therefore, the government should actively use government subsidies to promote the export trade activities of potential and existing export enterprises within the framework of WTO. Moderately reduce the policy subsidy of "super national treatment" to foreign-funded enterprises, really attach importance to the export promotion policy of private enterprises and corporate enterprises, and improve the support; We will improve the rules of subsidy distribution and distribution, and improve the efficiency of promoting subsidized exports.
