Local Practices of Cultural Heritage Conservation in Rural Tourism

Challenges, Strategies, and Policy

Cultural heritage in tourism has been acknowledged as an essential means of encouraging rural development. As the primary source of attraction, cultural heritage has become a magnet to attract visitors and increase people's quality of life. However, sustaining the cultural heritage is always challenging, especially when paired with tourism. It has become more complex and has multifaceted dimensions related to its cultural heritage conservation and preservation, but at the same time, it needs to meet the visitor's expectations. Therefore, it needs to seriously investigate the challenges between knowledge and local practices and the challenges and strategies regarding policy and local framework to contribute to existing knowledge.

The Architecture and Urbanism Research Group, University of Leeds, invites PhD students, heritage conservation and preservation researchers, practitioners, architects, urban planners, and other related fields interested in sharing knowledge and experiences to participate in the seminar. Participate in this seminar by submitting an abstract and presenting ideas focusing on the local practices of cultural heritage in rural tourism: challenges and strategies. The scope of this seminar as described below:

Theme one: Challenges to Cultural Heritage Conservation in Rural Tourism

There will always be tensions that challenge the process of cultural heritage conservation and preservation. Tensions include tangible and intangible cultural heritage, authenticity and modernity, identity versus diversity, locality versus global, traditional versus the use of technology, and support systems, for example, the infrastructures, the economy, funding, and management aspects. Not to mention, as the stakeholders involved are not single entities, conservation is even more challenging. Therefore, it becomes essential to discover the challenges as part of the problem-solving process in conservation plans.

Theme two: Cultural Heritage Conservation in Rural Tourism: Between Policy and Local Framework

As the rural area mostly has its own context and peculiar cultural heritage, the developing strategies and policies, a local framework policy that integrates the local people as the guardians of the local practices with the government from the higher level of authorities to the local level authorities. The policy could bridge the law and regulation level to a technical level. Therefore, it is important to enforce engagement among stakeholders to discuss and develop a suitable local policy framework to conserve and preserve the cultural heritage in rural tourism.

Theme three: Case Studies in Cultural Heritage Conservation in Rural Tourism

The local practices of cultural heritage around the globe have been presented as diverse and unique and have their own peculiarities. Each place has its own context and specific culture. From tangible to intangible cultural heritage, or both. The tangible cultural heritage includes artifacts, architectural structures, monuments, urban heritage, bridges, dams, sacred sites, and landscapes. The intangible cultural heritage includes Spiritual and religious, performing arts, Social Practices, Knowledge related to nature, Traditional Culinary, folklore, and oral tradition. Therefore, learning and exploring from other places is important to grasp key successes in local practices.
